

	Page
1. The need for and value of specifications for purity	1
1.1 Value in protecting the consumer	1
1.2 Value for regulatory purposes	1
1.3 Value to industry	2
1.4 Value in determining safety for use	2
1.5 Source and nature of impurities	3
2. General considerations on food colours	4
2.1 General principles governing the establishment of specifications for identity and purity	4
2.1.1 Natural colours	4
2.1.2 Synthetic organic food colours	5
2.1.3 Substances studied	5
2.1.4 Note on the specifications in the monographs.	6
2.2 General principles governing the toxicological evaluation	8
2.2.1 Classification of colours in accordance with their toxicological evaluation	11
2.2.2 Conclusion	12
3. Notetothereader	13
4. Classifications of colours	15
5. Monographs on Colours in Toxicological Categories A B and CI	21
6. Specifications for Colours in Toxicological Categories ●●●●CIII and D Which are Used in Some Countries	103
Appendix A Methods	154
Appendix B Test Solutions	169
Appendix C Index by Colour Index Number 1956	172
Appendix D Alphabetical Index	191